Dear Sir/Madam

I was sickened by the recent ABC Stateline Tasmania program (May 8, 2009), which showed appalling conditions on a pig farm in the north of the state which continues to be supported by Woolworths. We saw desperately ill, wretched animals living in their own excrement and mud, and being eaten alive by maggots in their wounds; some so ill they could not stand. They did not even have water to drink.

The farmer in question is facing a number of cruelty charges.

Although I understand that my groceries may be a little more expensive and it may be a little inconvenient, I have made the conscious decision not to shop at Woolworths until such time as it makes a public statement that it will no longer support such egregiously cruel farming methods.

Yours sincerely
